RE: ACCJC 2013 Annual Report—Institution Set Standards

Overview

The Accrediting Commission for Community and Junior College’s (ACCJC) 2013 Annual Report adds a new requirement asking each college to report on the following metrics:

- x Successful student course completion rate in Fall 2012;
- x Retention rate of students from Fall 2011 to Fall 2012;
- x Degrees awarded to students in 2012;
- x Students who transferred to four-year colleges/universities in 2012; and
- x Certificates awarded to students in 2012.

Additionally, each college is to report the institutional standards for each of these five measures.

The ACCJC defines a standard as “the level of performance set by the institution to meet educational quality and institutional effectiveness expectations.” Note that these minimum standards

(minimum) standard might necessitate a college action to meet the standard. While the ACCJC does not define what this term means. However, one can expect that a college (e.g. an institution) set a standard of a 10% course success rate. If the college could not meet the “reasonable” standard, the implementation of the standards will also be dependent on changes in student demographics or changes in policy of time.
